Texas Sons of the American Revolution

The M 1777 musket was used by some of the French troops in America, toward the end of the American Revolution and throughout the French Revolution and Napoleonic era in Europe and abroad. Although commonly referred to as the "77 Charleville" the raffle model, a replica, has St. Etienne markings on the lock plate. There were several armories in France that produced these muskets. This is a beautiful, slender musket that is also very well balanced for its length. It has proper bottom mounted bayonet lug, and a bayonet, as well as a trumpet rammer and cheek piece on left side of the stock.
